

Tip # 18 – The Pros and Cons of Publishing Annotations Online

One aim of our project is to find out what readers need in order to benefit from online annotations and to create a best-practice model for such annotations. The departure from print-based explanatory notes has, of course, certain advantages and disadvantages.

Pro	Con
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li data-bbox="79 571 796 884">• No space restrictions: Our annotations are more informative, we can cite all of our sources and provide more detailed discussions of complex passages and problems. <li data-bbox="79 940 796 1198">• Accessible to everyone: We provide all internet users with reliable annotations. Thus, those who cannot afford scholarly editions or benefit from our project, too. <li data-bbox="79 1355 796 1556">• Reader-friendliness: Our readers do not have to search for endnotes. Also, they can filter annotations and search our database. <li data-bbox="79 1780 796 1926">• Links: We can create links to other websites (e.g. the OED) and between annotations. <li data-bbox="79 1937 796 2038">• Multimedia: We can include pictures, videos, audio files, etc. 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li data-bbox="798 571 1536 828">• No space restrictions: Readers might be overwhelmed with information. Our solution: All notes have to be relevant and directly connected to the primary text. <li data-bbox="798 940 1536 1299">• Accessible to everyone: Unlike many publishers of annotated print versions, we do not have an “ideal reader”. Thus, we do not know how much information our readers need or already have. Our solution: Categories and levels. <li data-bbox="798 1355 1536 1713">• Impact on reading experience: Many people are not used to reading long texts online. They might wish to read the primary text in print and only our notes online. Our solution: We’re testing ways of accommodating our system to the needs of our readers. <li data-bbox="798 1780 1536 2074">• Possible distractions: Extensive notes and links to other sites can distract readers from the primary text. Our solution: Our notes are aimed at readers already familiar with the text.